The Silk Trade
Teacher's version

The Silk Trade

Silk is a fabric whi	ch peo	ple	consider	to be a luxury	_ material. It	is incredi	bly soft ar	nd delicate	to touc	h and is ι	used to m	ake expensive	articles	of clo	thing. The	e Chinese first made silk in approximately 3000 BC.
When silk was firs	t disco	vered	it was	reserved for the exc	lusive	use of the	e Emperoi	r of China.
Only his close relatives and the highest dignitaries were given permission to wear silk. Gradually, silk came into more general	use and	ordina	ıry	men and women began to wear it as well.
It may seem	amazing	_, but silk	was also	put to industrial use by the Chinese. It was used to make parts of musical instruments, fishing lines and even an unusual	unusual kind of paper, called rag paper.

Silk became	precious	, desired by other countries and w	as used as a	currency	to trade with. From India to Italy, the exchange of silk for other goods, such as pomegranates and grapevines, was common	·
For centuries _	individuals	travelled th	ne route known as 'The Silk Road'. It linked the East to the West, and gave the	opportunity	for the trading	of a variety of goods and ideas.
Silk production	in the world has do	oubledd	luring the last thirty ye	ears, despite	silk bein	g replaced by artificial	fibres fo	r some uses. C	hina remains	one of the pri	ncipal exporter	s of silk, and with Japan	is responsib	ole for over	er half of the silk that is manufactured in the world today.
